6 golden columns

6 electronic circuits with a Bluetooth-enabled sound player and speakers.

1 simple chair.

Variable dimensions depending on the space. Minimum 3 x 3 m. Height 1.5 m.

The Casa de Campo is a park in Madrid that, for centuries, the kings of Spain could admire from the windows of their apartments in the Palacio de Oriente. They filled it with trees and even built a lake within its boundaries. And so, for centuries, it was their place of leisure and hunting, reserved exclusively for them.

With the arrival of the 20th century and its revolutions, this park, like all royal parks, became state property, and fortunately, now we can all enjoy it. It is a semi-wild park that allows for complete freedom of movement among its trees. Small animals, mainly birds, some native and others invasive, coexist here with people. In the morning, it is a pleasure, and sometimes a horror, to hear their trills and squawks.

This random electronic installation is a tribute to those small creatures that make our lives more pleasant.

Casa de Campo es un parque de Madrid que durante siglos los reyes de España utilizaron para la holganza y el placer de la caza, solo reservado para ellos. Afortunadamente ahora todos podemos disfrutar de él. Es un parque semisalvaje que te permite moverte con absoluta libertad. En ella conviven pequeños animales con las personas; principalmente pequeños pájaros. Por la mañana es un placer poder escuchar sus trinos.

Esta obra es un homenaje a esos pequeños seres que nos hacen la vida más agradable.
